TRUCE EFFECTED WITH 1,200 CALIF. MUTINOUS CONVICTS

Send Message To Warden Of Folsom Prison, California

GIVE THEIR TERMS

Machine Guns, Tanks, And Officers Were Lined Up For Battle

By Clem Whitaker
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

FOLSOM STATE PRISON, Cal., Nov. 25 (I.N.S.)—A truce was effected today with the 1,200 mutinous prisoners who have held sway in a section of the State Prison here since shortly before noon yesterday.

The truce overture was made by the convicts just as the troops and guards without were drawn up prepared to attack.

The first hint of peace came in a telephone message to Warden Smith from an unnamed convict.

About 7 o'clock one knife, a revolver and some ammunition was passed by the prisoners to the captive guards and relayed by them to the guards outside.

The warden said the convict who acted as spokesman for the group stated that the terms of their surrender were that they "not be beaten, abused or starved."

Under the terms of the truce it is believed a surrender of the prisoners will be effected without further bloodshed. The uprising of the prisoners already had cost nine lives.

FOLSOM PRISON, Calif., Nov. 25.—Planked by machine guns, rattling gun emplacements, armored police cars and a bombing squad, a grim, silent army of 1,000 men today awaited the signal that will send them into a bloody prison battle that has already claimed the lives of nine men, left twenty-two others maimed and turned Folsom Prison into a shambles.

Within the cell block, 1,200 desperate convicts, their ring-leaders facing certain death and determined to sell their lives dearly, await the army of prison guards, police, deputies and 800 state troopers.

Adjutant General R. E. Mittelstaedt, commanding National Guard troops, and Warden Smith, chief of the Civilian Staff, massed their forces last night and prepared to attack at dawn.

Two army tanks, their noses pointed toward the south gate, and bristling with machine guns, are expected to lead the attack.

The tanks, manned by experts, will be shot through the outer gate of the prison school building and if possible wedged into the gate that connects with the cell-block proper, according to battle plans. Once planted in the breach, the guns of the tank will command the immediate interior of the rock-ribbed cell block.

With the tank guns, it is planned to sweep the entire area where the desperate horde of convicts barricaded themselves and shot it out with guards and police shortly before dusk last night.

High pressure fire hoses, in the hands of Sacramento firemen, may also be brought into play.

In the event that these methods fail it is intended to take the prisoners by storm.

Inability to determine the number of guns in possession of the desperadoes made the outcome of this morning's expected attack uncertain.

At Massack, a guard, who was beaten into insensibility by the prisoners, and then thrown through the cell-block door, furnished the most definite information on conditions within the prison. He said he saw four guns in the hands of prisoners, and believed there were more. He could not say how much ammunition the convicts had.

Union Thanksgiving Service Is Very Well Attended

A goodly representation of the Protestant churches of Bristol gathered in the Zion Lutheran Church yesterday morning at 10 o'clock to participate in a Thanksgiving service.

The message of the morning was delivered by the Rev. John Ellery, Ph. D., pastor of the Methodist Church. The Rev. Ellery chose as the subject of his discourse, "Thanksgiving to Almighty God for Benefits Received."

The pastor of the Lutheran Church, Rev. Paul R. Ronge, was in charge of the service; and the scripture was read by the Rev. Howard L. Zepp, of the First Baptist Church. A prayer was offered by the Rev. Andrew George Solia, pastor of the Italian Presbyterian Mission.

A selection by the choir of the church where the service took place was well rendered, the anthem being a most appropriate one for the day.

BRISTOL HIGH HOLDS TEMPLE TO 6-6 TIE

Teams Battle in Rain on The High School Field Here

EVENLY MATCHED

(By T. M. Juno)

Despite an early rain, one of the biggest crowds to ever watch a Bristol High football game saw the locals play a 6-6 tie game with Temple High in one of the best games played in this section for years, here, yesterday.

There was much glory in the even played battle. A game come-back was never seen than the desperate surge and forward pass attack of the Cardinals and Gray in the third and final quarters.

The first quarter was all to the big Cherry and White clan from Diamond street. In this quarter they reached Bristol's twenty-yard line, but were held for down.

On the second play, after the change of goals, Ferris, flashy half-back of Temple, heaved a 45-yard forward pass to Dunn, which resulted in a touchdown. The kick for the extra point failed. From then on the tide of the battle seemed to be in Bristol's favor.

At the beginning of the third period Bristol unleashed a forward pass attack. They tried eleven forwards, nine of which were completed, one grounded, and one intercepted. Captain "Whitey" Odyke was on the receiving end of six of these forwards.

By repeated end runs by Spadaccino and Slatoff and by forward passing Bristol reached the 15-yard line. This ended the third period. At the beginning of the fourth quarter De Risi hurled a forward to Odyke who barely caught it and ran for a touchdown. In the try for the extra point Satterthwaite's boot escaped the uprights by inches.

From there on the game was an exciting battle, both teams struggling for a break, but neither team receiving it.

Captain "Whitey" Odyke played the best game of his high school career. He was always in the game, making many tackles, besides being on the receiving end of many passes. This game was the final one for Odyke, as he graduates next June.

"Jim" Harrison, Bristol's other end, played a wonderful game. Much is expected of this youth who is but a sophomore.

"Mike" De Risi, the tower of great strength all season, played his usual game. On the offense De Risi is placed in the backfield where he has shown great stuff. On the defense he is a tackle and very hard to get by. Mike still has another football season.

Shiffer played a fine game as usual and will be missed in next year's football season.

Winslow, Satterthwaite and Carnvale also played a good game. Of the three Satterthwaite will be the only one missing next season.

The backfield men all showed great training yesterday, both in running with the ball and throwing forward passes. Spadaccino, the fast quarter back, as well as Strumfels, showed great field generalship in the game.

Hansen, Slatoff and Earle also played a wonderful game. Strumfels, Slatoff and Earle will be missing next year.

For the visitors Ferris and Landrum shined.

DENTAL CLINIC MOVED TO WOOD ST. BUILDING

Children To Be Treated Each Thursday of School Term

DR. LOWE IN CHARGE

The dental clinic which has heretofore been conducted during the school term in the Community House, will be established in the Wood street building, commencing Thursday, December 1st.

The clinic, which is made possible by the co-operation of the Girl Reserves and the Bristol School Board, will be in charge of Dr. Nathan Lowe, of Philadelphia, who during the past few years has treated many children here.

The proceeds of the sales conducted on "Daisy Days" each year by members of the Girl Reserves are used to help defray the expenses, while the school board also assists materially. An up-to-date chair and cabinet are at Dr. Lowe's disposal on the second floor of the Wood street building, and each week one or two of the Reserves will assist him.

Examination of the pupils' teeth at the public and parochial schools is made by Miss Nora Jones, school nurse. When defects are found, cards are given to the students to take to their parents for the signatures of the latter, which are necessary before the work may be done. A nominal charge is made for the work performed.

The clinic will be operated each Thursday during the school year. Some time ago the clinic received its start in Bristol, and after a brief lapse of time was revived two years ago.

The schools wish to express their appreciation to the public for the financial co-operation given during the past seasons. During the sales on the last two "Daisy Days," the Girl Reserves cleared approximately $270 which will assist materially in the upkeep of the clinic throughout the coming term.

LATE NEWS

LEWISTOWN, Pa., Nov. 25 (I.N.S.)—Andrew M. Thompson, 68, part owner of the Thompson Knitting Mills, was scalded to death in his room in a local hotel early today when he fell into a bathtub. His body, in falling, was believed to have struck the hot water faucet, filling the tub with water. Attaches of the hotel, hearing running water, investigated, and found the body. Thompson was the last of five brothers who owned the knitting mill enterprises.

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Nov. 25 (I.N.S.)—Roy E. Frey, of Bath, is a prisoner in the county jail today awaiting court action following an automobile accident, when he struck and killed Elmer Hoch, 35, of Weaversville, while driving along the Northampton Pike late yesterday.

GYMNASIUM MAY BE GAINED BY NEWTOWN

Lot Is Contributed for The Erection of "Gym;" League Meets

ADJOINS 'BORO' PARK

NEWTOWN, Nov. 25.—Announcement was made at a meeting of the Newtown Home and School League in the school auditorium Tuesday evening that a contribution of a lot had been made for the erection of a community gymnasium. The home and school league has been greatly interested in the movement and it is probable in the course of some months a new gymnasium for this borough will be in the course of erection. The lot adjoins the borough park.

During the business session there was a discussion on the possibility of donating 100 supplementary readers for the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades.

The principal, Willard Shuster, was called upon for suggestions as to how the league can help the school. He said improvements could be made to the stage and scenery and that a lunch room for the girls would be greatly appreciated.

Almost 100 persons attended the meeting and listened with much interest to a talk given by George A. Walton, principal of George School, who told of the meeting of the International Teachers' Association held in Toronto, Canada, last summer.

Mr. Walton said the representatives at this gathering were actual teachers from the class rooms and not school supervisors and principals. Mr. Walton said he was greatly impressed with the friendly spirit among the teachers. He said the inter-mingling did more for the inspiration of the teachers than some of the excellent lectures. Teachers were represented from China, Japan, many European countries, United States and Canada. There was an assemblage of 7500 teachers.

Toronto, continued Mr. Walton, spared no efforts in making the teachers feel at home. A very elaborate pageant was given in their honor. A feature of this was that the chorus in this pageant was composed entirely of amateur voices. There was not one paid singer in the chorus.

PENNA. GARDENERS PLAN FOR CONFERENCE

Will Assemble for Three Days To Compare Their Notes

AT THE STATE COLLEGE

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Nov. 25 (I. N. S.)—Pennsylvania's fruit, vegetable and flower growers will gather here Nov. 28 to 30, to compare notes on new and better wrinkles in gardening, as guests of the State School of Agriculture.

The three-day conference, the feature of Horticulture week here, will consist mainly of round table discussions and scientific demonstrations. Instead of the usual program of formal speeches.

Instruction in packing, spraying, dusting and pruning will be given by the School of Agriculture staff, together with lectures on identification of plant diseases.

Among those who will lead the forums are D. M. James, of the State Bureau of Markets, G. S. L. Carpenter, of Hancock, Md., Wayne Breish, of Ringtown; Gilbert S. Watts, of Bellwood; J. Horace McFarland, of Harrisburg, and Adolph Muller, of Norristown.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 25 (I.N.S.)—Conservation of Pennsylvania's natural springs is dependent in a large measure on the care and protection given the State's forests, the State Department of Forests and Waters revealed today.

Basing their reports on a survey of the relation of floods to forests, experts of the department came to the conclusion that the forest cover is a great help in the maintenance and conservation of springs.

This was demonstrated, it is pointed out, on the Oliver Estate near Wilkes-Barre. Twenty years ago this tract, heavily timbered, had seventeen springs, with a daily capacity of 250,000 gallons. The timber was removed, and now only seven springs are present, with a flow of water diminished to 50,000 gallons.

YARDLEY XI WINS CHAMPIONSHIP OF LEAGUE SECTION

Defeats Bristol in Thanksgiving Day Game by 13-7 Score

1600 WITNESS BATTLE

Game, Which Started With Crash, Is Interesting Throughout

Yardley eleven won the Bucks-Montgomery League championship in this section yesterday when they defeated Bristol 13-7, in a fiercely contested game on Yardley's field before 1600 spectators.

The game started with a crash, the Bruins receiving the kick-off and starting a march down the field that ended with Snyder crashing through for a touchdown. It looked like a walkover for Yardley at this early stage of the game, but Bristol came back when Cook ran the Bruins' right end for a score and then added the extra point by a perfect placement kick.

Bristol kicked off to Johnson, who ran it back to the 30-yard line. Logan was injured on the play and was forced to leave the game. Snyder made 15 yards through left tackle and L. Huddy received a forward from Johnson and ran to the 10-yard line. Harrison added three yards through center and Snyder went through right tackle for a touchdown. Johnson failed to drop-kick the extra point.

Yardley kicked to Bristol, Johnson sending the oval over the goal line. Bristol put the ball in play on the 20-yard line. Fine made three yards at center, but Hutton and Cook each lost trying the ends. Cook then punted to Yardley's 35-yard line.

Harrison hit left guard for a yard and Snyder fumbled on a thrust at left tackle, Bristol recovering. Cook was thrown for a 3-yard loss by E. Huddy. Hutton made it first down around left end. A 5-yard penalty on the next play put Bristol on Yardley's 29-yard line. On the next play, a lateral pass from Hutton, Cook went around the Bruins' right end for a touchdown. He added the extra point by a beautiful placement kick.

Yardley kicked off. Bristol failed to gain and Cook punted to Moore. Harrison and Johnson made first down. Ed. Huddy made 15 yards through the line, carrying the ball to Bristol's 40-yard line. Johnson failed to gain at left end. E. Huddy made six yards and Snyder made it first down. Harrison made eight yards through left tackle. E. Huddy made it first down. Then, with the ball on Bristol's six-yard line, Johnson was tackled hard and fumbled, Alex Smith recovering for Bristol.

Hutton, in an attempted end run, did likewise, and Johnson recovered and went over for a touchdown and added the extra point with a drop-kick.

The second half was hard fought, but produced no scoring. Bristol was held to two first downs, both made by the shifty Hutton, whose open field running was always a threat. During this half the Bruins were always threatening and during the early part of the third quarter carried the ball to the one-yard line, where Bristol put up a stonewall defense and held.

The entire Bristol team fought like tigers throughout the game. Being outweighed man for man the line had to take an awful hammering, but when the Bruins had the ball on Bristol's goal line "Al" Bauer and his men held the champions for downs.

The lineups:

Yardley	Bristol
Logan.....left end.....	Lawler
Hillman.....left guard.....	Bauer
Owen.....center.....	Lippincott
Clark.....right guard.....	Smith

THRIFT VS. PARSIMONY

Saving is a virtue that is being dinned constantly into the ears of a public grown weary of being preached to. The success of many men society brands with greatness is laid to their ability to put pennies aside so they grow into dollars. Convincing lessons are taught by the compound interest tables. Saving is one of the few so-called habits that are not only condoned but glorified.

All of which no doubt is very impressive. You cannot eat your cake and keep it. But keeping cake, after all, is merely delaying the enjoyment, and there is always the possible danger that, in the interim, you may lose your taste for cake or the cake itself. Further, if you eat your cake, you may have an excellent incentive for going after another piece.

The vision of the poorhouse is, of course, depressing. On the other hand, it is less depressing to see people who have spent their lives saving when their increased earning capacity proves they had no real necessity to save? Consider the numbers of people who live in discomfort, forego pleasures, stint on clothing and otherwise make themselves miserable for the sole end of putting up worldly stores. The very necessities of life assume the aspect of sin and the government taxes them to distraction.

There is probably as much to be said against saving as there is to be said for it. Consideration of the subject leads to the conclusion that saving is not so much a virtue as knowing when and how much to save. Intemperance in saving is as lamentable and ill-advised as intemperance in spending.

INGRATITUDE

Poets and poetasters, essayists and songwriters have vied with one another in picturing the wickedness of ingratitude. Obscure old fellows in the crowd strike a tragic attitude when the hero of the day passes by, and remark that the hero would not be where he is were it not for some little kindness or opportunity rendered him before he came to power and which he apparently has forgotten.

Ingratitude no doubt is an unpleasant quality, and yet the motives for its exhibition are nothing like so sordid as is commonly imagined. For ingratitude is not so much a lack of recognition of favors received as it is a realization of the importance of those favors. People like to feel that they have achieved success solely through their own efforts. It kills all satisfaction to admit that somebody else is really responsible. Quite naturally people like to put out of their mind those occasions in the past when they were in need of help. In fact, a superabundance of gratitude may even indicate a touch of the morbid, such as impels a murderer to return to the scene of his crime.

Nor are the people who charge ingratitude altogether free from criticism. For they reveal that they expect a return for what they are supposed to have done from the kindness of their hearts. They indicate that they take pleasure in seeing the beneficiary plodding along with the carcass of an obligation chained to his person.

There are, no doubt, many instances where gratitude is honest and admirable. But not infrequently it is suspect. When a person becomes exceedingly grateful it is well to consider what new favor he may be preparing to ask.

Woman, Owner of Town, Plans A Resort Center

By International News Service
SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Nov. 25.—Sole owner of the town of Garber, Missouri, in the heart of the "Shepherd of the Hills" country; made famous by Harold Bell Wright, Mrs. Ada Clodfelter, is planning to place a little village on the roster as a resort center. Mrs. Clodfelter, who operates several small hotels at Garber, is believed to be the only owner of an entire town in Missouri.

Garber is four miles from Marvel Cave, one of the Ozarks' most famed beauty spots, and has a population slightly in excess of fifty inhabitants.

The property acquired by Mrs. Clodfelter includes a house and one hundred and sixty lots, on which stand the railroad station, post office, several scattered homes and one general merchandise store.

Mrs. Clodfelter became interested in the village because it was the home of "Old Matt" and "Aunt Mollie"—Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Ross—characters in Wright's novel, "The Shepherd of the Hills." Garber is also one of the oldest settlements in the State.

"Old Matt" was for years the postmaster at Garber and also ran the general store.

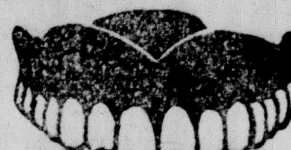

The property at Garber was acquired merely as an investment, Mrs. Clodfelter said. It is valued at about $4,500 and was taken in trade with M.

J. Shackett, Eldorado Springs, Mo.

Mrs. Clodfelter plans the immediate erection of a large summer hotel and numerous cottages on the property, in addition to her present holdings.

DEPENDENT EXHIBITORS OF FILMS DECLARE WAR

By International News Service

LONDON, Nov. 25.—A state of war exists in the British film industry.

The two "armies" now facing each other are the independent exhibitors, representing probably 3,000 cinemas, and a group made up of companies, controlling circuits of theatres, along with companies which combine film exhibition with film production.

It is the independents who have declared war.

They have drafted a plan whereby the independents, through a central organization, should hire their pictures as a society and not as individuals. By this scheme they expect:

Preservation of capital already invested.

Securing of films at economic prices.

Participation of exhibitors in the normal development of the industry.

Fear Americans

The reasons for this movement appear to be a fear that the wealthy American film companies mean to buy or obtain control of many British cinemas, and a resentment of the position of Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, an organization which controls 116 movies in Britain. This organization is the most powerful theatre chain in Britain, and for some time the independents have been considering a counter organization.

At the same time the independents dread the encroachment of the American film companies. Therefore a thrilling situation has been created by the statement made by A. Evans, managing director of the Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, that if the proposed new "National Circuit" becomes a fact, he will at once sell the chain of theatres under his control to one or the other of American corporations who have already offered to buy.

One of the American companies mentioned in this respect has been the First National, which has, in turn, stated that it has no intention of buying British theatres.

Careful Campaign

If this "national circuit" is brought into being, then a film war involving millions of pounds will at once begin, and in it every great American company will be almost forced to take a hand.

The independents have considered their plan of campaign very fully, and, in addition to setting out in complete detail a common hiring scheme, under which the rentals of pictures would be lowered, they also mention the possibility of financing the building of studios, taking an interest in British production and in the purchase of the British rights of foreign films.

Such a course as the latter would certainly paralyze the entire film industry in Britain.

SYNOPSIS

Fabien, a good and handsome youth, of France, trains for the priesthood; but meets and loves Manon Lescaut, a beautiful orphan being taken to a convent by her rascally brother, who doesn't want to be bothered with her. Manon's brother, seeing Ravaur, a rich connoisseur of women, smitten with her, realizes her worldly value and sells her to Ravaur. But Fabien, who loves her, goes to Paris, where they wander into a boarding house and are put into the same room. Fabien goes out to buy food. Returning, he finds Manon has innocently undressed and gone to bed. He is tempted.

Exhausted from the strain of this first fight with himself, Fabien sank into the big chair by the window and buried his burning head in his hands.

The storm outside became more furious. A blinding flash of lightning lit up the room. Fabien did not move.

A resounding clap of thunder awakened Manon, and with a terrified start she sat up in bed and looked wildly about. Sleep had been so sound and the awakening so sudden that she did not realize where she was. But when a second zig-zag of lightning opened the heavens and filled the room with light she saw Fabien and rushed over to him without a moment's thought or hesitation. Like a terrified child she threw herself into his arms and cuddled close—her face hidden against his shoulder to shut out the terrifying storm.

Fabien's face was white and strained. Just when he had about conquered himself it was difficult slightest change. Thoughts of things that might have been were this were forgotten in the ecstasy of a kiss or the forgetfulness of an embrace.

Even poor little Fifi was neglected. Her milk saucer was not awayed full, and she probably wondered why her fish bone was dry and hard instead of juicy with delicious flesh.

One morning as Manon was holding Fifi in her arms, explaining that lack of food did not matter because she always ate too much anyway, Fifi playfully clawed at the ribbon around Manon's neck and the locket came untied and rolled off on the floor.

"You shall have a fine gold chain for your locket when we become rich," said Fabien as he returned the trinket.

"Oh, you darling!" Manon rushed to him and snuggled impulsively into his arms. "Fabien, you must promise never to scold me for liking beautiful things, especially jewelry, for I adore it!"

"I shall never scold you, sweet heart. I, too, like beautiful things, and we shall have them—some day in the meantime, do you suppose you could help me fix the lace in my cuffs?"

With his arm around Manon, Fabien led her to the window, where his coat was spread over a chair, disclosing a pair of badly soiled lace ruffles.

"They seem to be hopeless," said Manon sympathetically.

A whiff of wind blew the window curtain across the chair. The creamy lace net flouncing on the bright colored chintz seemed to offer itself as a solution to their problem. Quickly Manon tore off the bottom ruffle and fastened a fresh neat lace in each cuff. It was ingenious and they laughed happily at their success.

Back of them the door opened without warning and Marie unceremoniously burst into the room.

"The old lady says you got to dig up the rent," she announced without hesitation.

An empty purse forced Fabien to face stern reality. He wondered why the landlady insisted upon the rent being paid. Was it a streak of meanness? Surely she did not need the money.

Manon's reaction to the demand was quite the opposite to Fabien's. To her it seemed funny for anyone to ask money from them. She could scarcely suppress her laughter.

Marie always wanted to smile when Manon laughed, but this was business. Besides, she hated Fabien as much as she liked his mistress, so she kept a straight face, and turning toward him belligerently she said: "Well, what about it? You've been here a week to day."

"A whole week!" broke in Manon suddenly. "Fabien, today, then is our anniversary!"

A rueful nod was Fabien's only answer.

With upturned palm Marie continued to hold her ground, and her presence and demands so infuriated Fabien that he glared and said, "Get out!"

Knowing that this attitude would do no good, Manon rushed to the door and whirled the angry girl about just as she was ready to flounce from the room.

Marie had worshiped Manon since the first time she saw her in the hallway that rainy night, so it needed just a little coaxing and pleading for Manon to persuade her not to report to the landlady about the unpaid rent.

With one arm about Marie, Manon signaled for Fabien to leave the room. Marie was an agonized by his presence, and she could handle the situation better alone. Fabien interpreted the signal correctly and, greatly amused, gathered up his wraps and quickly departed, with a final kiss blown from his finger tips before he closed the door.

Marie looked after him in disgust, then back at Manon appealingly. "You are a silly little fool, waste your time on a pauper. At your looks you ought to be rolling in money—and you could if you set your mind to it."

But Manon shook her head and said, "I would never think of such a thing—we love each other." Knowing the ways of young women in Paris, Marie smiled wisely when she replied, "You'll come to it. Paris will tell you that diamonds give a lot more light than penny candles."

With a laughing shrug Manon dismissed the idea.

"Marie, come here," she called. "I want you to do a very special favor for me—promise before I begin!"

"Well, yes, I'll do it. What is it?" It was impossible to read Manon anything, besides, there was a touch of mystery in this, a Marie loved mystery.

"I want you to take my looking glass to the first jewelry shop, tell you come to on the Boulevard and ask the owner to take it back in return for the gentleman's back's that were left there a week ago. Can you remember that?"

Fabien again held her close and kissed her.

to have Manon precipitate herself so appealingly into his lap. He tried to pat her shoulder reassuringly, but a still more vivid flash of lightning seemed to set the room on fire and Manon's arms went tightly around Fabien's neck as she clung to him in terror.

Surely this was a strange answer to Fabien's prayer. No possible power could help him fight his passion any longer. With a cry of happy relief, his arms went about Manon and strained her to him. He kissed her neck—the first kiss he had ever given a woman. He buried his head in her shoulder and kissed her again and again. Manon looked at him bewilderingly. His eyes tried to convey their passion. He bent reverently and touched her lips. In a moment he was holding her tighter and kissing her wildly. Manon was no longer frightened. Her beautiful eyes filled with flaming love and adoration were at the same time dreamy and elusive. Fabien again held her close and kissed her madly.

The little candle on the table flickered in its stem, sputtered and went out.

CHAPTER VI

Love, Youth and Poverty

A company of three, Manon, Fabien and poverty, lived happily together in the little attic room. They were concerned only with their great love and meagre wants. Their project of marriage was forgotten. They unconsciously defrauded the church of her riches and found themselves united as man and wife without thought or fear of consequences.

So absorbed was Fabien in his passion that he gave little thought to his family. He never dreamed of the distress that his mysterious absence was causing his father. Not for a moment did he doubt Manon's power to captivate and win his family's admiration and blessing. Back of it all was the idea of obtaining his father's consent to their marriage, and Fabien explained to Manon that aside from filial duty and love it would be wise because his father had unlimited means, and their slim finances were already sadly reduced with no available means of replenishing them.

For the time being, however, life was too sweet to mar it by the

FOOTBALL THE SAME THE COUNTRY OVER

By Davis J. Walsh
N. S. Sports Editor

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (I.N.S.)—Perhaps because he was young and innocent and full of illusions, some of which really may have been pre-war, the writer made one of those mistakes which only time and experience can condone. He permitted himself to be led into tacit acceptance of the theory that Eastern football constituted a more virile, man-made game than that which prevailed in the Middle West, an error wholly understandable in view of the fact that the section in question had begun to believe that maybe it was a little more courteous than the book required.

And then he saw Illinois play Ohio State!

It was a typical game, he was assured, such as one big ten rival played against another and yet no Eastern setting could have been possible for the occasion without a series of penalties. Harvard, in fact, probably would have had either or both of them arrested had they played the crimson at the Cambridge stadium.

I wouldn't say that the game was exactly rough. Illinois and Ohio State are very good friends on the gridiron and will continue to be probably until death does them part. In fact, there was nothing objectionable about the play of either team. They merely were very firm with one another. When the occasion arose they were almost adamant.

When a play was finished, there was likely to be twenty-two men on the ground, not half dozen who might be immediately concerned. I have seen many Eastern games in which the standees were in the vast majority and apparently planned to remain so for the afternoon.

If they played such a game as Illinois and Ohio State took as a matter of course, the penalties would be numerous because few Eastern teams of my acquaintance can become at all rugged in their attentions to an opponent without getting rather personal about it. This usually leads to rough play on both sides and, therefore, is taboo except in college circles where the parlor never heard of a living room.

Getting right down to it, one wonders just who was responsible for the idea that the East was tough and the Middle West timid about its football. True, I never heard of a modern conference team playing dirty football but, as to that, it is highly improbable that any team of any consequence is guilty in this respect. It just isn't being done, East, West, North or South.

Football, in fact, is pretty much the same the country over. I have found that they all use an oval ball, eleven men on a side, a field 100 yards in length and their hands on attack any time they think they can get away with it.

In other words, they can't make you tough with a geography. You get that way all by yourself.

What do you want? Manon managed to ask through dry lips.

"You, of course!" Then as he saw her recoil from him he added impatiently: "Oh, come now, be sensible. You've led me a merry chase—but you won't escape me again."

"I won't go with you," Manon's eyes were wide with terror but she was, nevertheless, defiant.

"Not that tone with me, young lady, you have exhausted my patience too long as it is!" Lescaut scowled threateningly and pushed her toward the door, in a rougher manner than Manon had ever experienced.

With a cry that expressed both mental and physical hurt, she wrenched herself free and put the table between them. "Andre, Fabien and I love each other! If you try to separate us I will kill myself," she cried passionately.

Before Lescaut had time to reply they both heard a man coming up the stairs. Manon's eyes brightened with relief.

"That is Fabien coming back!" she said. "Go quickly or he will turn you over to the police."

Not since Lescaut last sat at the gaming table had he thought so hard and fast. Holding Manon away from the door he said, sharply, "Des Grieux knows better than to call the police; they are after him for abducting you!"

"No—No!" With both hands outstretched as if to ward off a blow, Manon's eyes implored her brother to tell her that this was not true.

Lescaut grew triumphant. At last his argument seemed to affect her. "So—I see. You don't care about yourself, eh? It is just that blessed man of yours that seems to worry you. Well, here he is," whispered Lescaut as the footstep drew nearer. "Not a word about my being here or there will be trouble."

With this last threat, Lescaut disappeared behind a long alcove curtain, just as a man's knock sounded on the door.

CHAPTER VII

It surprised Manon that Fabien should knock. He never had before. It was probably a new idea of his to surprise her. She longed to rush out and welcome him with open arms, but was so shaken with nervousness, as a result of the interview with Lescaut, that she could not move.

Torn between dread and indecision she called, faintly, "Come in."

...

The door was opened slowly, but instead of Fabien a strange man stood there eyeing her inquiringly.

"You were looking for someone, Monsieur?" Questioned Manon in bewilderment. She had never seen the man before.

"Yes, I am looking for my good friend Des Grieux—perhaps it is just as well that I speak with you instead," Jean Tiberge softly closed the door and advanced toward Manon. "My task is not easy for I see that you are just a child."

He smiled sadly.

"Non, Monsieur, I am seventeen!" Under the kindly eyes and quiet manner that belonged to Tiberge, Manon's nervousness was fast leaving her. She thought how lovely it was to have Fabien's friends call; if only Lescaut and his threats could be forgotten.

Manon saw the curtain move—her brother was listening!

"Monsieur, won't you sit here," she said hastily, designating a chair with its back to the alcove. "Fabien will return very shortly."

"I have not come on a pleasure call," Tiberge accepted the chair, but continued eyeing Manon compassionately. "Mademoiselle, do you realize what a chaos you are making of the Chevalier's life?"

"What do you mean, Monsieur? We love each other, and we are quite—quite happy..."

Tiberge drew in his breath quickly. "You are married then, you and he?"

...

With wide innocent eyes looking at him wonderingly Manon shook her head, negatively.

"Then it may not be too late to save him from all of this," Tiberge's relief was evident.

Lescaut listened attentively from his hiding place. He was perplexed about the unknown caller but became greatly impressed as he realized that the man was playing right into his hand.

SYNOPSIS

Fabien, good and handsome youth of France, trains for the priesthood; but meets and loves Manon Lescaut, beautiful orphan, whose recently brother, realizing her worldly value, barbers her for gold to Rocor, rich connoisseur of women. Fabien saves her and carries her off to Paris, where they wander into a boarding house and, in a great and sacred love, live happily together, though poor, because Fabien spent all his money getting Manon a jewel she innocently coveted. She asks a maid to return the jewel to the store, and get the buckles Fabien gave in part trade.

"I can remember well enough," answered Marie disdainfully, "but it's a crazy thing to do!"

"No, it is not. They are Fabien's, and I want to return them to him on our first anniversary—tonight. Please?" coaxed Manon.

"Well, all right. Give me the lockets. Just the same, I think you are a little fool." Marie went out the door grumbling.

It was a relief to get rid of her, because after Fabien's departure Manon had been impatient to look from the window and vain to him. He would be waiting in the street below. Ever since their elopement in the little attic room it had been a sort of ritual with them.

Manon danced over to the window and looked down. Fabien was there! The worry vanished from his face and he smiled happily. She had been so long in coming he thought she had forgotten!

"You were looking for someone, Monsieur?"

Fabien was so engrossed in gazing at his adored one that he backed into a push cart, loaded high with fresh fruit and vegetables. All the produce, the vendor, the cart and the young lover were scrambled together on the street in an appalling mess.

Manon, perched high above the scene, was the only one who laughed. Fabien extricated himself from the vegetables and dashed quickly around the corner before the owner of the wrecked cart had a chance to know what and who caused all the troublesome havoc.

Manon was convulsed with laughter. It was especially amusing to see sedate Fabien do such an undignified thing. After he had disappeared she remained at the window gathering a bouquet of bright little flowers from the boxes. She planned to have them on the table when Fabien returned. It was a great pleasure for her to do little things like that because he was always so appreciative and grateful. How happy she was! Life was just a glorious mingling of thrills and contentment.

While Fortune had smiled on Manon and Fabien for a whole week, it had taken this same time to play many false tricks on Andre Lescaut.

Determined to find his sister, Lescaut and the Comte had combed Paris. A great deal of money had been spent on what proved to be a vain search. It seemed impossible that an inexperienced girl and a young student priest could have eluded them. Lescaut was desperate. He wanted easy money from the Comte, but the crafty old retired banker had flatly refused to hand out any more until Manon was safely delivered to his quarters.

Lescaut had just about decided to give up the search when he paused in his wanderings until the debris from an overturned push cart could be cleared from the walk. As chance would have it, this was the very accident that Fabien's absorption in Manon had brought about. Bored with the incident, Lescaut began looking around at the people and houses, as he had been scanning faces for a whole week it had become a habit. Suddenly his roving eyes saw Manon picking flowers from her window boxes.

Immediately his whole countenance became brighter, and he

Two Hundred Enjoy K. of C. Annual Thanksgiving Dinner

Approximately 200 members of the Knights of Columbus and their guests assembled in St. Mark's Hall on Wednesday at 8.30 p. m. to enjoy the annual Thanksgiving banquet.

Arthur P. Brady acted as toastmaster. The menu, which was most tempting, was served by McAllister, of Philadelphia. John Delio, of Trenton, led the assemblage in a number of peppy songs, and later the Bluebirds of Philadelphia furnished music for dancing.

The hall was most attractive in its decorations of purple, white and gold bunting, and flowers likewise added to the appearance.

Ward Liner Mexico Grounds; Ship Enroute To New York

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (I.N.S.).—The Ward liner Mexico, carrying between 150 and 200 passengers, went aground on Banquilla Reef in the Gulf of Mexico early today, according to a message intercepted by the Independent Wireless Company at 4.45 a. m. The message stated it was believed that all on board would be saved, as the sea was not running high.

The message stated that the captain of the Mexico had wirelessed the Gulf Refining Company's station at Port Arthur, Texas, asking that rescue ships be rushed to the scene.

The Mexico, an oil burner, was enroute from Vera Cruz to New York, her home port. The vessel has a net tonnage of 37,000, and was built in Philadelphia in 1906. On September 27, 1926, the liner went aground on Marly Reef, also in the Gulf of Mexico, but rescue ships reached her before much damage was done.

Holiday Takes Toll Of Victims Of Accidents

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 25 (I.N.S.).—The Thanksgiving holiday resulted in one death by fire in this city when Rose Beneditto, South Philadelphia fortune teller, was overcome by flames believed to have been caused by rats gnawing on matches in her one-room home.

All efforts to trace relatives of the dead woman have been futile.

MAUCH CHUNK, Pa., Nov. 25 (I.N.S.).—Funeral arrangements are being made today for Mrs. Mary Yetsura, 45, and her four grandchildren: George, Mary, Annie and Frank, ranging in age from 5 to 15 years, who were overcome by coal gas in their home at New Columbus yesterday. A fifth child, Michael, 7, is in a critical condition in Coaldale Hospital.

Authorities are looking for the woman's husband who is alleged to have deserted her.

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 25 (I.N.S.).—The Thanksgiving holiday resulted in a hunting tragedy in this vicinity. Theodore Jarmon, 15, brother of Bobby Jarmon, Wilmington pugilist, was killed instantly when he peered down the barrel of his shotgun to see why the gun failed to discharge when he attempted to shoot a rabbit. In some manner the weapon was discharged, the charge striking the boy in the forehead.

Look over the equipment on this latest Nash. It's the best that money can buy—big, over-size, over-strength, Biflex bumpers; rear fenderguards to match; latest type of shock absorbers; extra wheel; spare tire, lock and tire cover; actually more than $100 worth of extras included in its low price.

The rear deck seat is big and roomy. The upholstery is gray Colonial leather. Driving lights are controlled at the steering wheel. Instruments are grouped in a charming walnut finished panel. A smart car in every detail with sparkling nickel trimmings.

And a fast, powerful car, with a big 7-bearing engine, rubber mounted and precision balanced for quiet action. The 2-way 4-wheel brakes of Nash are over-size for super-safety. And the newly refined steering mechanism is the easiest on earth.

All this week the Cabriolet is being given a special introductory display. Ask about the special terms now available on your present car.

You are doubtless receiving numbers of letters every day, from merchants, telling you in flowery language and otherwise of the superior qualities of their lines. We have enough confidence in our lines of merchandise to let them speak for themselves. We do not like "Hurrah Sales" nor "catch phrases." But to carry the full meaning of our intentions we had to use the words "Raus Mit 'Em." And we mean just that—we are going to "Raus Mit 'Em"—our merchandise must go, and we want our old customers especially to avail themselves of the opportunity these prices afford to get their share of these big values.

After all, Thanksgiving was a day set apart for giving of thanks for a bountiful harvest.
